DECLINE GRAVEL PERMIT

On June 11, the Lane County Board of Commissioners will have a hearing to help determine whether the board should review the Lane County hearing official's decision to deny Delta Sand and Gravel a special use permit to mine gravel on land that is zoned for exclusive farm use.

The hearings official carefully spelled out in his 20 page findings that Delta's application for a special use permit did not meet the requirements under law for approval. Unlike the hearings official and members of the Oregon Land Use Board of Appeals, Lane County commissioners are not specialists in interpreting law.

This case is important to both the applicant, Delta, and to the residents of the Santa Clara community who oppose mining in their neighborhood. It does not, however, possess countywide significance, a requirement for the Board of Commissioners to review the case. Recently the commissioners declined to review the Parvin Butte mining decisions; it would be reasonable for them also to decline review in this case.

The board can save county resources by declining to review this application for a special use permit, and relying on the findings of the impartial hearings official.

TAKING SHELTER

I talked to a homeless man who spends his nights at the Mission and asked him what he thought about the place. His main comment was that the Mission is too crowded and noisy. He can't concentrate well enough to read because of the noise level. He said they're putting mattresses on the floor to accommodate all the people staying there. The food has gotten worse and they no longer give them donuts in the morning, which matters to him because he's about 50 pounds underweight.

The Mission no longer allows them to pay $2 per might, but requires an hour and a half of work. This is a problem for him if he has to do it in the morning because he needs to get out of there for his "semijob" selling The Motivator homeless newspaper. He said the men have to line up for the showers because there aren't enough of them, and he doesn't like the lack of privacy in taking showers.

He said every high school student should spend a night at the Mission to motivate them to do whatever they have to so they don't become homeless.

Most of this would probably apply to any mass homeless shelter. It's a whole lot better than having people outside in the rain and cold, but individual micro-housing, such as is planned for Opportunity Village Eugene, is a better idea. Gives people some privacy, the ability to be alone, less regimented.

The problem I see with the Village is that it requires an enormous amount of planning by volunteers, and wading through the city's bureaucracy. The planning and organization required take a long time. The Village will probably be great for its residents, but I think what SLEEPS has in mind, smaller camps spread around the city, may work for more people. Needs to be kept simple, so that it doesn't need so much organization. The City Council has just begun to discuss this, with input from SLEEPS. We'll see how it goes.

COUGARS ON CHARADE

EW should be commended for its investigative article "Predatory Nonprofit?" [5/16] detailing how the NRA and Safari Club International are funding a push to kill Oregon's cougars with packs of dogs. In 1994 Oregon voters passed Measure 18 which made it illegal to chase cougars with hounds. This law has been a resounding success and no cougars have hurt anyone! But a small group of trophy hunters wants to undo this law so they can wipe out cougars.

Oregon's voters should be outraged that such a self-serving small group is openly coercing the Legislature into undoing a voter-supported law that protects Oregon's wildlife. The Legislature should not listen to scare tactics or allow themselves to be bullied by special interest groups

That article in EW blows the top off the Oregon Outdoor Council's little charade. We see this questionable nonprofit for what it is: a cover for national and international groups like the NRA who have unlimited resources and aren't afraid to throw their weight around.

Papa Doc Persists

umors abound in Salem's Capitol these days. Summer is two weeks away and the deadline for completing this legislative session is only five weeks away. Is there a deal imminent? Negotiations for a final budget yet?

It depends on who you ask. A few weeks ago, when Gov. Kitzhaber signed into law the PERS reform bill SB 822, he said it "was a good start." After he got the $271 million in good news from the May revenue forecast, he said: "We can do better." Read between the lines. Sure enough, the governor upped the ante by laying out a new compromise framework on further PERS reforms coupled with additional revenue. House Speaker Tina Kotek and Senate President Peter Courtney brought their Democratic caucuses back to the bargaining table.

But Senate and House Republicans refused to budge, no interest in coming to the table. Instead they held a medical provider fee bill hostage in the Senate for no apparent reason — $2 billion in budget cuts to Oregon health care, senior care, mental health services. Economic models show 14,000 hospital or secondary jobs in Oregon are reliant on this federal money alone. Several Republicans are already on record saying they support the provider bill, but only with further PERS reforms and with no commitment to end tax breaks for the wealthiest Oregonians. Doesn't look much like a negotiation to me.

Last week, the governor announced it was time to move on: "I regret that Republican leadership has not indicated a willingness to develop a balanced compromise proposal involving both PERS and new revenue." As late as last Thursday (May 29), I checked in with House Revenue Chair Phil Barnhart; he confirmed: no further PERS reform; the Republicans aren't moving on additional revenue. House Majority Leader Val Hoyle is quoted in the papers: "It's stunning to me, from a strategic perspective," and "PERS is the main thing they want to do, and they're willing to walk out of here without that vote." Meanwhile, groups like the Oregon School Boards Association and Stand for Children — who used to be allies of the Democrats before they started bashing teachers — were freaking out as time ran out, telling legislators that there's still something in the works. Maybe there is.

Dr. John Kitzhaber was first elected governor in 1994, the same year I first got elected to the Oregon House. Before that, Papa Doc served in the Oregon House and then 12 years in the Oregon Senate; eight of those he was Senate president. (I named him "Papa Doc" because his son Logan was born his first term.) I watched him maneuver four sessions in his eight years as governor in his first two terms — while Democrats were in the minority each session! Remember, the Oregon Health Plan and the Oregon Salmon Plan were passed with Republican majorities in both chambers for his entire eight years. The dude knows how the Legislature works and he loves a challenge. More vetoes than any governor in Oregon history. But he still got stuff done.

Suddenly, last Thursday, out of nowhere, the Republicans came up with a counter-proposal. While it's a partisan piece of crap on its face, asking for $1 billion in additional PERS savings already rejected by Democrats, it offers $130 million in new revenue. Papa Doc is a fisherman, and this counter-proposal — weak as it is — is a nibble. Stay tuned.

Earlier in the session, Hoyle introduced me to her counterpart in the House Republican caucus, Minority Leader Mike McLane. Good guy. Mike grew up in Condon, got his law degree from Lewis and Clark and clerked for Justice Mick Gillette, one of my favorites, at the Oregon Supreme Court. He lives in Powell Butte and works for Miller Nash, a prestigious Portland law firm. He has a good sense of humor and doesn't take himself too seriously, unlike, say, Rep. Dennis Richardson.

Although Mike's a rookie, he's a quick read. And he has the benefit of Salem Rep. Vicki Berger, a smart and reasonable veteran, as his Republican caucus whip. (No, your eyes did not deceive you; I just said nice things about two Republicans in one paragraph.) They at least give me hope that Papa Doc the OOC does — a group has to be pretty disreputable in order to have their own treasurer turn them into the attorney general's office! The charges against the OOC administrators are very serious.

The OOC is a facade created by trophy hunters just two years ago, whereas the conservation groups that have repeatedly stood up for the cougars are reputable organizations like the Humane Society, Predator Defense, ForestWeb, Cascadia Wildlands and the Oregon Cougar Action Team.

OOC is trying to do a brazen endrun around the will of Oregon's voters; the Legislature needs to stand up to their intimidation. Learn more at orecat.org and send a "No on HB 2624" email to your senators!

MATTHEWS FOR COMMISH

Kevin Matthews is just the sort of person we need to bring a fresh voice to the County Commission race. When I heard Kevin speak at the first "Conversations on the Forest" event, I was impressed by his articulate and well-constructed arguments while discussing forest economics and ecology. Since then, I have gotten to know Kevin has a colleague and as a friend. He is diligent in his volunteer work as a community organizer and dedicated to improving life in Lane County. Kevin will bring new ideas to the table and open up a discussion to find real solutions to our county's economic problems. I, for one, am glad he's decided to step up to this challenge and will enthusiastically support his efforts.

GETTING IT TOGETHER

Last fall I was encouraged, urged really, by well-respected friends and colleagues to attend a Paul Cienfuegos workshop. I visited his website paulcienfuegos.com and while intrigued, I was skeptical. In the end, I went and became fully engaged in a new way of looking at "democracy." Paul is a seasoned educator with a fresh perspective and a deep historical understanding which sheds light on current governmental/ corporate dysfunction. Please come see for yourself from 6 to 9 pm Thursday, June 13, at LCC's Building 17, Room 308. The only way to get it together is together.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Cienfuegos is also planning a Florence workshop June 14 at a time and place TBA.

AUDITOR IS A WASTE

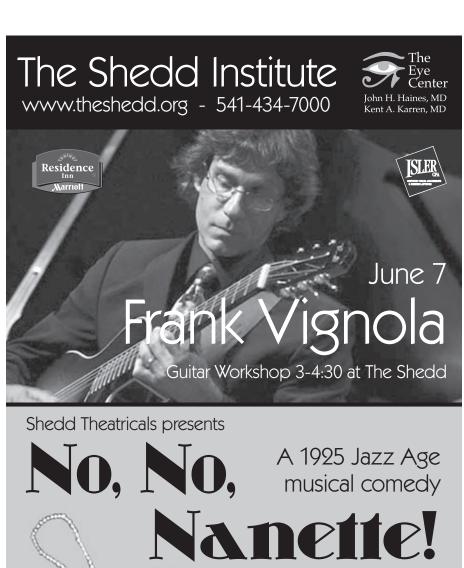

What I've experienced with the Eugene police auditor's office is a waste of time and money. You would think they are supposed to defend the general public and their complaints against the police, which is just the opposite. All they do is defend the police and the present auditor, Mark Gissiner, who was accused by former auditor Cris Beamud of shredding a lot of files, which he shouldn't have been doing. It's time to eliminate the auditor's office and save the taxpayers a lot of money.

I was laughed at, of course. Don't mess with kids' sports!

I also made the suggestion that we turn out street lights (starlight city nights) and office building lights after 2 am or have motion detection lights only. Not only would these ideas save energy, pollution and help mitigate climate change, they would also save money for the schools and city. Aren't they having financial difficulties?

Let's teach our children about prioritizing what's most important, making sacrifices for the good of all, global citizenship and moral integrity. A good start would be to work on saving our forests from the planned clear-cutting of 1.5 million acres of federal forests by private timber industry. A carbon tax/fee would help to get us going in the right direction.

PARTY SMARTER

Hey, university kids: I, like you, enjoy a crazy party, wild adventures (aka drunken walks through the street with friends) and loudly declaring my overwhelming love of the present. We are in our 20s and ready to live life like we are never turning 30. I get it, I really do.

As we tromp through these formative years of tequila shots and fuzzy memories we need to remember one thing: Discretion is freedom. You don't want the cops coming to your party? Don't be that house with three-dozen cans of Miller Lite on the front lawn for a week. Don't smash your glass bottles in the alleys and streets where bikers are going to run over them and pop their tires. Did you ever think someone might fall and injure themselves on that pile of glass? Trust me, it's happened.

When people are angry they complain. When people get hurt they complain. When the neighborhood is covered in trash, people notice and then they complain. When enough people complain action is taken. Clean up and be a good example; seriously, there are proper receptacles everywhere.

School is stressful and it is so incredibly necessary to blow off steam and have a good time. By all means party hard, but please, party smart too.

SPARE THAT TREE

About 10 years ago the city of Eugene planning office thoughtlessly approved a conditional use permit allowing UO to construct a new daycare center at 17th Avenue and Moss Street. Fairmount Neighbors appealed the decision but the UO was allowed to build there anyway. The permit contract forbid UO from removing any roots or coming within 35 feet of a nearby historic ponderosa pine. UO sent workers who removed nearly half the root system and dug deeply less than 10 feet from the tree. Sprinklers were installed there to flood the tree and water some scrappy shrubs planted next to the daycare center.

UO has now posted the ailing ponderosa with a sign declaring it a hazard and stating that it will soon be removed. This is not permitted. The city has been contacted. UO will be receiving notice soon from Eugene about what the UO is required to do. UO needs to shut down the daycare sprinkler system immediately. The ponderosa may survive if the flooding of what is left of the root system ceases. UO is trying to purposely destroy the heritage tree to enable greater flexibility for future redevelopment next to the daycare center.

I used to go to the Moss Street daycare center. UO and the city of Eugene teach families around the center an important lesson. Now they know UO planners and

REMEMBER DARFUR

I am a child of immigrants. My father, born in Nuremburg, never completed more than eighth grade and served in the cavalry. He became a labor relations arbitrator, thus pursuing a career of securing equal pay for equal work through unions. To this day, teachers fight to secure their wages and benefits, and when all is said and done, women make just 77 cents to a man's dollar, which is not fair.

My mother was born near the family farm in Bristol, S.D. She very simply said two things to my sister and me, "You can't change the weather," which I really don't believe, and that she was "crazy for daisies." Simon and Garfunkel intoned "still crazy after all these years," and as one who has lived with mild to severe depression over 20-plus years, I can state that 10,000 lux $\,$ "Happy Lights" from Costco may be your saving grace. Research may well prove craft lights are equally effective in leading men and women back to fine point work.

But in seriousness, although the Dalai Lama brought sun and warmth to the region, we must not forget the people of Darfur. After a hiatus, the Lane County Darfur Coalition is mounting a new campaign in the Willamette Valley to do what we can to bring human rights, peace and justice to the region of the Sudan. Our movement follows the blog of Eric Reeves and Nicholas Kristof.

On this Memorial Day, we mark the lives of all those lost to the genocide. I've asked my sister to put sunflowers on our parents' grave in San Diego. We are immigrants, and we come from good stock.

DEDICATION OF NEWEST MONUMENT

chorus of bird songs filled the air on a recent stop at HAL-BA ("downstream"), one of the new Kalapuya Talking Stones that will be dedicated at a public ceremony on June 8. The beauty of the Whilamut Natural Area provided a peaceful place to reflect upon the incredible progress Springfield and Eugene have made in honoring the Kalalpuyas.

It's been only 15 years since a member of the Citizen Planning Committee of East Alton Baker Park (CPC) heard Kalapuya elder and storyteller Esther Stutzman say that there were no Kalapuya names spelled correctly displayed anywhere in Oregon and that The Oregonian newspaper had reported that the Kalapuyas were extinct. Stutzman said it was as if the Kalapuyas never existed even though they were the largest indigenous group in western Oregon.

The CPC began conversations with Stutzman, and together they set on a course to bring Kalapuya presence back to the park. The CPC hoped that the partnership would increase public support for the value of preserving the park land in its natural state, balance the park's history that was dominated by stories of European settlers and provide insights

Four years after the initial contact, the park name was changed from East Alton Baker Park to the Whilamut Natural Area of Alton Baker Park (WNA). Whilamut is the Kalapuya word for "where the river ripples and runs fast" and is likely how the Willamette River was named. The 2002 naming ceremony was attended by hundreds of people who heard a Kalapuya song sung in public on the banks of the Willamette River for the first time in 150 years.

The first 11 Talking Stones — basalt stones inscribed with Kalapuya words — were installed in 2003 throughout the WNA, four in Springfield's Eastgate Woodlands and seven in Eugene. Both Willamalane Park and Recreation District and Eugene Parks and Open Space sponsored the name change and the Talking Stones project.

When the construction of the I-5 Willamette Bridge was announced, the CPC immediately went into action to name the bridge for the Kalapuyas. Springfield CPC members met with their state representative Terry Beyer, who was chair of the House Transportation Committee, and spoke at a meeting at the UO Longhouse to ask local Indian leaders for CPC members were part of the initial community group convened by ODOT in 2006 and today remain active. At first, their idea of honoring the Kalapuyas wasn't taken seriously, but six years of persistence paid off. Backed with information and wisdom from Stutzman and David Lewis, ODOT staff and other community members warmed up to the idea of having the bridge and art honor the Kalapuyas.

As part of mitigative restoration from the I-5 bridge project, ODOT sponsored four more Talking Stones to complement the existing 11 for a total of 15 Talking Stones. Both the numbers five and three are special to the Kalapuya Stuzman will lead the dedication ceremonies at 1 pm Saturday, June 8. Attendees will hear Kalapuya songs, and, hopefully, some of the park's resident birds will again be singing.

The event will begin at GUDU-KUT ("frog"), located at the north end of the Knickerbocker Bridge. Parking is available at the Aspen Street boat launch area in Springfield's Eastgate Woodlands. The longest distance between one new Talking Stone and another is just over 1 mile. For more information, see willametteriverbridge.blogspot.com.

Charlotte Behm made the initial contact with Esther Stutzman and as chair of the CPC, led the efforts to rename the park. Vicky Mello is the current CPC chair. Behm and Mello promoted the idea within the ODOT project that both the bridge name and art honor the Kalapuyas

HEMP HISTORY WEEK FOCUSES ON INDUSTRY

It's not pot! That's one of the main messages behind Hemp History Week, says Eugene hemp activist Michael Moore, better known as Papa Hemp. Eugeneans will gather for a free educational event from noon to 10 pm Saturday, June 8, at 267 Van Buren St. across from Ninkasi, and learn more about the plant that can't get you high.

"So many people today, when they hear the word hemp, they immediately think of the word marijuana," he says, and while more people are now laughing at the Reefer Madness-style depiction of cannabis, there's still a lot of misinformation about hemp, which has ineffectively low levels of THC, the psychoactive substance that gets people stoned. Hemp is legal in the U.S., but growing it isn't.

Moore says that until agricultural hemp was criminalized in the 1930s, it was as important as oil. Naval fleets used it for their sails, and it was an important structural piece of levees designed by the Army Corps of Engineers, allowing water to spill over, if necessary, while maintaining structural integrity. Part of the reason it was criminalized, Moore says, was its ability to compete with the timber industry, which could look at reincorporating hemp into its troubled business model.

Canada re-legalized agricultural hemp in 1998, and after a brief period of infrastructure development, it began exporting hemp and its products, to the tune of $10 million (Canadian) by 2010. Much is sold to the U.S., where it's used in many products — mostly foods like hemp milk or in clothing. Advocacy group Vote Hemp says that the U.S. hemp industry is already worth more than $400 million in retail sales.

Moore says that he called one inventor who made a car from hemp to talk about bringing one to a event, and he was told that the inventor couldn't make another car due to a hemp shortage. He says Oregon's economy could benefit if industrial hemp was legal again, and Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley agree — they've sponsored the Industrial Hemp Farming Act of 2013, which would legalize growing the already legal product.

Saturday's speakers will discuss different aspects of hemp's uses and economics, including Hemp Shield, a local company that creates a deck stain and sealant. Foodies can check out hemp ice cream from 4 pm until supplies run out, and parents can bring young ones to the kids zone. Leave those pipes and bongs at home, though, Moore requests. This isn't that kind of event.

NEW RULES SEEK TO BENEFIT WOLF RECOVERY

It's been more than half a century since packs of gray wolves wandered the rim of Crater Lake and the Three Sisters Wilderness, but conservationists say that their howls may soon be heard again in those areas, once they disperse into western Oregon. Due to a recent settlement between several conservation organizations, the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife (ODFW) and the Oregon Cattlemen's Association, wolves are now granted increased protection by Oregon law, easing their transition as they recover their population.

The settlement was the end of a legal conflict that started in 2011, when Cascadia Wildlands, Oregon Wild and the Center for Biological Diversity filed a legal challenge

'So many people today, when they hear the word hemp, they immediately think of the word marijuana.'

- MICHAEL MOORE, HEMP ACTIVIST

UO architecture students aren't just taking classes and making floor plans, they're using their degree-earning time to rebuild a house — with a special focus on the marriage of design and sustainability. The Center for the Advancement of Sustainable Living (CASL, sounds like "castle"), at 1801 Moss St., is re-creating and adding onto the house where it's based, while inviting the local residents inside to brainstorm about their own projects.

CASL sprang from the thesis project of architecture student Jo Rogers, who designed a low-impact house that used technology and had a modern-living feel. In December 2008, the UO and CASL student leaders signed a memorandum of understanding for the house at 1801 Moss St., and CASL has been building ever since.

"When we got the house it was pretty dilapidated," says UO architecture graduate student Shannon Arms. The house needed a new foundation, new subfloor and new roof. Now those trappings are complete, plus insulation and windows. "It's almost a brand-new house," she says. When students finish retrofitting the existing house, which will be a common living area, they plan to complete a three-bedroom addition in which three CASL student co-directors will reside. CASL will then become even more of a demonstration and education center for sustainable living, with tours, workshops and speakers.

The German design standard behind the CASL house is called a "passive house," which Arms says could be compared to LEED for houses. It's centered around making the house as airtight as possible. "There's a measurement system where you pump the house full of air and you measure how much air actually leaks out. When you go inside and close the door, it's super quiet, and it takes about three people to heat it up pretty quickly," she says. "They call passive houses 'hair dryer houses' because in theory, you're supposed to be able to turn on a hair dryer and heat it in the wintertime, which is kind of amazing."

The CASL house's pride and joy, the members say, are its windows, which are triple-paned and open in two fashions, one of which is just a few inches. This allows for ventilation without security worries. Without a discount for being an educational nonprofit, they would have cost the group $14,700. The house's walls are about 14 inches thick, Arms says, with insulation made of recycled blue jeans. "It's way less irritable for your skin," she says. "I've taken naps on it before. The only harm that it causes is that you sort of look like you were hugging Cookie Monster a little too tightly afterward. It's completely nontoxic and safe and it has a great insulating capacity. People get really excited about that because they think, 'Oh, I could have my kids help me with this,' and it's relatively affordable."

In addition to its major design elements, the CASL house makes small sustainability improvements more accessible to the average Eugenean, such as taping the floor at its seams so energy doesn't leak. They're designing a rainwater catchment system to be visually appealing and constructible in a single weekend, along with a how-to guide they can pass out. "And if they have questions," Arms says, "they know that they can come back to us and ask us."

CASL tries to propagate the idea of living sustainably in two ways, Arms says, by designing and reconstructing the house as students and by connecting to the community. The group is partway through a lecture series, which is open to the public, on green interior design. "We had a woman from a firm up in Portland come down and talk about how love and joy of places is tied to sustainability," Arms says. "It's not sustainable if you don't love it. I think that really resonated with a lot of people in CASL."

The message resonated with CASL's Nathaniel Rotta, an MBA student whose career goal is sustainable development for the mass market. "For me it's just being able to show people that a sustainable house isn't a box," he says. "It's being able to prove that it can be done and it can be appealing to everyone."

Undergraduate architecture student Halley Anderson says that for her, CASL is a special experience because it provides the opportunity to construct something physically, in addition to the environmental imperative. "I think it's really important to keep pushing what's possible in terms of sustainable living," she says, "and showing that to students who can carry that throughout studies and beyond."

Eventually, the group plans to add, as an educational element, monitoring systems that show how well the walls perform in trapping energy. "We're going to get a little dashboard, so we can show little kids that when they go breathe on the wall, there's moisture that moves across it," Arms says. "Your breath has water in it!"

Work on the CASL house is still under way, but Arms says that community members should stop by as the project continues. "It's taken about four years to get to this point, just because it's a student project and we fundraise as we go. I think that right now, fundraising is our biggest challenge."

against ODFW's lethal control of wolves due to conflicts with livestock. As a result. the state lost the ability to kill wolves in relation to livestock deaths until the matter was resolved.

At the time, legislation regarding wolf control was vague. Josh Laughlin, campaign director for Cascadia Wildlands, says that in 2011 before the injunction, the state could resort to lethal control when a cattle owner experienced two livestock losses over an undefined amount of time. "Now with this new agreement, there are clear thresholds that must be met prior to lethal control," Laughlin says. "And under this new plan, lethal control should be really rare and a last resort."

According to ODFW's website, the new plan says that lethal control of wolves can only be used when four incidents of wolfrelated livestock death occur over a consecutive six-month period. Also, livestock producers must show that they are actively using forms of non-lethal mitigation to discourage the wolves, including removing carcasses and bone piles from their fields, putting up electric fencing and being present during times in which cattle are particularly vulnerable, like birthing. One wolf, OR.7, also known as Journey has ventured into western Oregon but not yet formed a pack.

While this is only an agreement and the plan still needs to pass legislation, Laughlin says the new rules "have broad support across the political spectrum," including Gov. John Kitzhaber's office. Having specific rules in place will help to smooth conflict when wolves eventually disperse from their current habitat in northeastern Oregon.

"We're in the midst of a wildlife recovery success story, and with this new agreement in place, the story's just gotten better," Laughlin says. — Amy Schneider

MASTROVINCENZO SHINES FOR VICTORIOUS AZUL

The Eugene Metro Football Club (EMFC) Azul took on and defeated the Bend Timbers by a score of 4-1 in front of 700 patrons packed in bleachers above the South Eugene High School soccer field. In this season-opening game, fans and head coach Jürgen Ruckaberle got their first peek of Gaia Mastrovincenzo, a touted forward and midfielder from the prestigious Serie A's Riviera di Romagna in Italy, who stood out in leading her new team to victory.

Bend's Kristen Parr benefited from an Azul turnover and a vulnerable, spread out defense to score in the 10th minute, a goal Ruckaberle attributes to "a combination of errors."

Azul didn't make many errors after that gaffe. Taylor Housley scored on an assist from Taylor Boyer in the 31st minute to notch a 1-1 tie, and following halftime EMFC proved itself defensively with increased intensity, constant control of possession deep in Bend territory and three thumped strikes into the net for the final tally, including Mastrovincenzo's tiebreaker in the 63rd minute.

The Italian star had a hand in creating other goals, as well, and Ruckaberle was impressed. He says he thinks she has all of the tools, and he was encouraged by her aggressiveness on defense, her crisp, on-target passing and her ability to use both feet. She's a lefty but scored her goal with her right foot. "It was a beautiful goal," he says. "She is going to improve through the season. She is not used to the pace of the game because on turf, the game is faster than on grass, but the way I see it over two practices now and one game, she already has a running start. You can play her the ball in any way, and she knows what to do with it."

Mastrovincenzo isn't the only one getting acclimated or turning heads. Players coming over from the U0's women's soccer team played well with similarly limited practice time, so Ruckaberle was right in describing this game as an "experiment" — an ultimately successful

Azul will get a chance to continue to haunt the Timbers, as they travel to Bend for their next game and stay on the road for two games each in Portland and Seattle.

"If we get some results in those games," Ruckaberle says, "we can really regroup and have four home games at the end. If we do that, we'll have a chance to go to the next round. which is our goal." — Nick Poust

lighten up

The local paper reported that a collector of Asian art was arrested and held in jail for five weeks before being released for "capacity-based reasons." His crime was threatening to shoot a man he suspected of knowing about an art burglary. The art collector pled guilty and got three years probation. Lane County voters who approved a tax hike can now rest easy knowing that dangerous art collectors can hereafter be held in jail till the cows come home.

LOOKING FOR LYNX HABITAT

With thick fur and paws that work like snowshoes, the Canada lynx is a cat specialized for hunting in the snow. Already decimated by habitat destruction and overhunting, lynx are now facing the added danger of climate change, which may diminish their snowy habitats.

Earlier this spring a Public Interest Environmental Law Conference panel, "Return of the Missing Lynx: Helping a Formerly Banished Wildcat Reclaim Its Birthright in the West," detailed the challenges that face lynx conservationists, while also questioning why lynx do not yet have a federal recovery plan, even after their Colorado listing as endangered in 1976 and their federal listing as threatened in 2000.

"There needs to be a recovery plan in place to get the lynx off the endangered species list," said Paige Singer, a conservation biologist with Rocky Mountain Wild in Denver, Colo.

Singer described the Colorado Division of Wildlife's program to restore lynx in the Southern Rocky Mountains. Since the start of the program in 1997, 218 lynx were released to the wild, and from 2000 to 2009, 126 wild lynx births were recorded. The Colorado Division of Wildlife deemed the program a success, and now they are shifting to a longterm monitoring program.

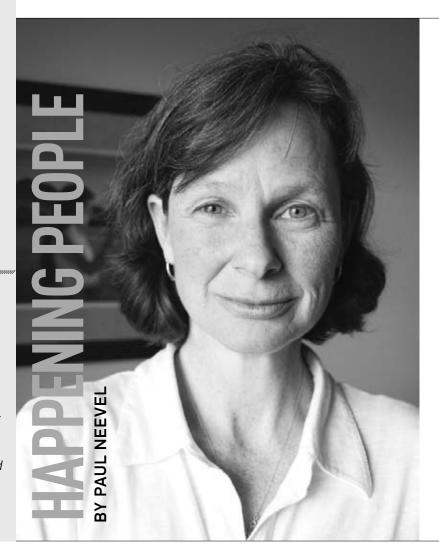

Although the restoration is a positive step forward, Singer said that lynx still need protection. Of the reintroduced lynx, 122 of them died, and 30 percent of those deaths were humancaused.

In 2009, the Fish and Wildlife Service designated 39,000 square miles of critical habitat for lynx, but excluded the Southern Rockies from this protected land. "At Rocky Mountain Wild, we believe the Southern Rockies population is critical to restoration," Singer said.

Matt Bishop, an attorney for the Western Environmental Law Center (WELC), said that the federal mapping of lynx critical habitat resulted in "arbitrary distinctions based on Forest Service boundaries" not based on where the lynx actually live. Lynx require specific types of forests for habitat. Unlike wolves, lynx are highly adapted to wintry, snowy conditions, making the selection of their critical habitat even more important.

Bishop said he wants to compel the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to prepare a recovery plan for the lynx and revise its critical habitat ruling. WELC filed a federal lawsuit in mid-March to force the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to finish its long-awaited recovery plan for the wintry feline. — Amy Schneider

"My first attempt at college was a failure," says Elaine Walters, who fled her unhappy family life in Santa Fe to enter college at University of New Mexico before she'd finished high school. "I had no study skills." A year later, she was pregnant. She had a son, Kienan, and two years later a daughter. Nitara, but when the children's father got violent, she gathered the kids again and ran off to another college. After a year at New Mexico State, she transferred to UO, where she earned a bachelor's in sociology and, in 1992, a master's in public affairs. "I was on welfare when I wrote mu thesis about welfare," saus Walters. who found part-time work as rural outreach coordinator for Womenspace. "I loved the job. It was focused on ending sexism and sexist violence." Later, she did consulting work with child abuse teams in nine counties, then took a job with the attorney general's Oregon Sexual Assault Task Force, training nurses to give sexual assault exams. "The common thread is making things easier on survivors," says Walters, who started the Trauma Healing Project 10 years ago. "I became passionate about healing as a path towards ending violence and abuse." Since it gained nonprofit status and office space in 2007, THP has trained nearly 3,000 people. Its healing arts program provides group and individual support, including yoga, acupuncture and digital storytelling workshops. Learn more healingattention.org.

POP-UP MARKET LOOKS AT FOOD ACCESSIBILITY

bination, but the USDA lists four Eugene food deserts, census tracts that contain a high percentage of low-income people living in areas with low access to fresh, healthy food. For a year, students from the UO Architecture School's Digital Media Collective (DMC) studied public use of private space and accessibility of healthy food throughout the city, and their final project is the fabrication of food shelving that's adaptable enough for "pop-up" markets.

Assistant professor Philip Speranza, who advises the group, says that food deserts like the Whiteaker can even contain grocery stores because some smaller stores don't hit low enough price points or might not have enough variety. That's why, in a farmers marketesque style, pop-up markets in collaboration with local businesses can augment what already exists. "It's great that everything is in the neighborhood," Speranza says, "but the project is meant to balance and complement the types of accessible foods."

Graduate student Madison Jackson's "adaptive market" project was the jumping-off point for the project, which continued with research on food accessibility in Eugene by undergraduate student Aliza

> Tuttle. Then the DMC worked to fabricate shelving with four bright colors and angles that allow it to set up in many configurations, Speranza says. "If you had a square and you rotated it, rotated it or turned it, it would actually be the same thing rotated," he says. "By adding a very subtle angle to it, it allows multiple configurations."

'It's really exciting to actually see something physically built, to have a tangible product at the end.'

- CAROLYN LIEBERMAN, UO STUDENT

Student Carolyn Lieberman says that the highlight of the project was creating something real that might be used in real life. "That's something that's really different in the architecture school world because none of our stuff actually gets built," she says, "so it's really exciting to actually see something physically built, to have a tangible product at the end."

- Eugene's Budget Committee has advised the City Council to adopt a plan that will use various reserves and anticipated PERS savings to prevent cuts to services for a year in spite of a projected $5.3 million budget gap. Now it's time to focus on the future. Interesting concepts emerged from budget discussions — the need for an independent performance auditor to examine city finances, questioning what services the city should be providing and how we finance big capital projects like rebuilding City Hall. All of these will be important factors in a larger question: How do we prevent future financial woes? Meanwhile, it's good that $Budget\,Committee\,members\,recognized\,that\,the\,vote\,against$ the city fee was not a vote against key city services. Rather, the vote indicated that the citizens do trust the Budget Committee and council to come up with better solutions.

City Club turtles stick their necks out to improve our corner of the world. Often breaking the law, Morton has spent her life working in civil rights, war tax resistance, Latin American solidarity and peace movements. Larson is a retired Lane County Circuit Court judge who has worked to solve problems in our judicial systems. He started the highly successful Lane County Drug Court in 1994 and continues to lead on sentencing reform Both are Eugene turtles who make us proud.
- Seventeenth President of the UO Michael R. Gottfredson chose a formal academic ceremony for his investiture May 30 in Matt Knight arena. The U0 brass ensemble played the prelude and the processional. UO ROTC posted the colors. University Marshall and geography prof Alex Murphy carried the university mace (a symbol of authority) to lead the capped and gowned faculty procession into the arena. Sen. Ron Wyden plus eight others delivered greetings from the podium. Melody Rose, interim chancellor, invested the new prez. He spoke. His closing charge to the assemblage: "Go
- What's happening with health care in Oregon and nationally? Local health care activist Ruth Duemler tracks legislation and the reform movement. "We are all waiting to see what happens Oct. 1 when we'll be able to enroll at coveroregon.com," she tells us. "Those with insurance can

- evaluate their plans and costs with all the other plans offered." Everyone will be required to have insurance, but big issues remain concerning consumer costs, whether enough doctors and nurses will be available to meet the demand, and whether doctors will be adequately compensated. She asks, "Will this lead to a single-payer plan that will eliminate the outrageous administrative costs of our health insurance companies?" The problem with Obamacare, of course, is that it perpetuates our bloated private insurance industry, but the Oregon Legislature is looking at statewide solutions. See Activist Alert for a meeting in Eugene coming up June 10.
- Longtime Eugene area artist George Ernst van der Linden died May 23 at age 76 after a long illness and with little or no public notice. A memorial service is being planned, according to friend Jessy Shrive, who can be reached at (415) 279-1187. We featured von der Linden and his art in a story by Eliza Murphy Oct. 11, 2011 (see wkly.ws/1hk). He was already in a nursing home at the time, surrounded by his colorful three-dimensional art. He was known for salvaging cast-off and broken materials into more than 100 clever sculptures and paintings that can be found today in yards and homes all over the valley and on the coast. "I love to make things out of junk," he said. It appears that art was his salvation from a troubled youth in Pittsburg and his struggles with bipolar disorder. Many of his sculptures have faces with two heads, his way of recognizing the "split personalities we all have."

Another recent loss in our community is longtime radio personality Barry "Bear" Corkery, who died May 23. A memorial tribute is being planned for June 22 at the Vet's Club. Corkery, 68, was a familiar voice on commercial and public radio since the 1970s and most recently was on the air and mentoring students at Community Radio KRVM. He is survived by his wife, Dorothy, and three children.

ANNUAL AWESOME

Every summer, the Whiteaker Block Party (pictured, 8/3) seems to grow by another block. Check out our 8/1 issue for a rundown of the music, food, art and more that heat up the Whit in the dog days of summer. And don't forget the Oregon Country Fair (7/12-7/14) and Eugene Celebration (8/23-8/25) for more awesome local culture.

Promote active living and open streets in the process. The third annual Eugene Sunday Streets takes place in downtown Eugene (7/21), with another edition in the Bethel Neighborhood (9/8). Walk, bike, roll, scooter, skate or even ride a pogo-stick and discover the benefits of active transportation in a safe and traffic-free environment.

Take a stroll through the Eugene Wetlands through the WREN Wetland Wander, held the second Tuesday of every month (6/11, 7/9, 8/13, 9/10). Check wewwild.blogspot.com for info each month.

Immersing yourself in lavender is as easy as it is fragrant at the Oregon Lavender Festival (7/13-7/14) at McKenzie River Lavender. Take a big whiff!

If mountain biking up hills and through the woods is your thing, check out Oakridge's Mountain Bike Oregon. There are two three-day rides this summer (7/19-7/21 and 8/16-8/18) during which bikers can, among other things, ride riverside trails and experience heart-pumping descents throughout the area surrounding the picturesque Cascade Mountains.

Not old enough to participate in MBO? Kids can get experience on a mountain bike ride for them. Take part in Kids Mountain Bike Day (9/23) in Oakridge, during which kids can learn the basics of riding a mountain bike, including positioning and how to stay balanced navigating trails full of obstacles. In addition, shuttled rides to nearby Flat Creek, Aubrey Mountain, Larison Rock and Alpine Trail will be offered.

Want to climb Mt. Hood or take a trip to the North Umpqua Waterfalls? Join the Obsidians, a group out of Eugene that specializes in mountaineering, and enjoy the splendors of these settings and many more throughout the summer. Along with climbing and hiking, the Obsidians offer an eclectic mixture of events, including trail runs and bike tours. Experience something new on an almost daily basis with a cavalcade of other outdoor aficionados.

Enjoy a family affair full of biking, camping and even some swimming if so desired with the Kidical Mass Family Bike Camping Trip (6/15-6/16). The ride begins at Monroe Park, from which participants will bike through Eugene to Armitage Park, the destination for fun and games, dinner, camping under the stars and a pancake breakfast.

After stuffing your face with pancakes, eat some pie. Register for and take part in Eugene's Blackberry bRamble (8/14) and get dessert as a reward for your efforts. There are three different rides, spanning 40, 62 or 100 miles, and no matter which one is chosen experience a scenic route, good food at rest stops and the ultimate prize: free blackberry pie and ice cream. — Nick Poust and Shannon Finnell

SUMMER'S GHOST TOWNS

he first thing we noticed was the quiet. Even the wind seemed muted as it whipped through the tall grass. Five friends had traveled 340 miles east from Eugene to find the ghost town of Whitney, and now we stood at a dirt crossroad, reading a sign with a horse-drawn carriage painted next to a steam engine. "Rails of the Sumpter Valley R. R. reached Whitney Valley June 1, 1901," we read, squinting in the hot July sun. "At one time 150 people called Whitney their home. When the railway was abandoned in 1947, the town closed down."

Seeking out ghost towns in Oregon is the perfect summer activity because it has so many avenues for the imagination, whether it's for the history buff, the sociologist, the environmentalist, the artist, the explorer or even the seeker of the supernatural. These ruins of the Western Frontier are littered across the state - a quick internet search shows at least 80 identified abandoned villages from as far flung as Whitney (and neighboring Sumpter) to as nearby as the former mining town of Bohemia outside Cottage Grove; visit during Bohemia Mining Days (7/18-7/21), a celebration of the town's history, for live music, a carnival, horse-drawn trolley rides, a beardgrowing contest, a "Cherry Pit Spittin' for Distance" contest and more.

The most famous of Oregon's ghost towns is Shaniko in Wasco County; however, the city still has about two dozen residents and thus, technically, is not a ghost town. "Real" ghost towns prime for visiting are Susanville in the Blue Mountains (where George Armstrong dug up a 80.4-ounce gold nugget in 1913), Josephine County's Golden (the site of many paranormal investigations complete with a rustic chapel and small cemetery) or Central Oregon's Richmond (complete with barn, school and church). But before you set off on your own history-chasing adventure, here are some ghost town tips: 1) Bring a map. No, really, bring a paper map. Yes, smartphones are handy, but ghost towns tend to be remote places for a reason and phone service can be sparse or nonexistent.

2) Wear closed-toe shoes (see rusty mattress springs below).

3) Enter at your own risk; many of the structures you will encounter haven't been structurally sound for decades.

4) Leave things as you found them.

5) Do your research. Several ghost towns are protected by federal and state law and thus, tromping through the equivalent of an archeological site could get you into legal trouble. Same goes for sites on private land.

Many adventurers and photographers may scoff at number five. "It's better to beg for forgiveness than ask for permission," they will tell you. And luckily for us, this turned out to be true. That day, a four-wheeler barreling down the dirt road toward us broke Whitney's silence. The driver was a hairdresser in Sisters and her family owned the property. We explained that we just wanted to take pictures; she gave us her blessing to explore and encouraged us to visit the town's nearby cemetery too.

What is left of Whitney is a cluster of small, wooden buildings that look one huff and puff away from being blown to the earth. No hints remained that the land was ever a "lumber company town," just a few bunnies hopping in and out of an old outhouse and some rusted $mattress\ springs\ woven\ to\ the\ caked\ ground\ by$ grasses that had sprung through the coils. The homes showed only the smallest signs of former human habitation: a desk chair, some cans of soup and empty glass bottles.

We piled back into our truck and barreled up the road to the town's cemetery. Nestled in a pine grove atop a hill, it was difficult to say how many plots there were because most were hidden under a layer of pine needles. One visible headstone read "Mina Marie Hale, Jan. 15, 1910, April 27, 1913." The little girl had passed nearly 100 years before. From what? we wondered. Influenza, small pox, hardship? Then the sky grew dark, lightning flashed through the pines and the low rumble of thunder rattled up the hill like an approaching bobcat. We humbly took that as a sign that our ghost town adventure was coming to a close and it was time to find a camping spot. — Alex Notman utside is the place to be when summer weather is officially here to stay, and many of the options to comfortably enjoy the heat in Eugene involve water. Take a dip in swimming holes in the area, or travel to a water park and enjoy all it has to offer. Eugene and its surrounding areas have it covered, with refreshing activities that cater to both adults and children.

Water features, both manmade and natural, are plentiful in the area. Triangle Lake Slide Rock, located off Hwy. 36 near Blachly, is an all-encompassing, beautiful spot for cliff jumping, swimming and gliding down natural water slides. Situated at Lake Creek Falls, this scenic venue features a waterfall that funnels into a pool begging to be swam in.

If Triangle Lake isn't enough, there are plenty more areas to enjoy scenery while going for a relaxing swim, and many include a view of a nearby waterfall. You don't have to be an avid hiker to reach these spots, either. In Lorane, there is $\boldsymbol{Kentucky\,Falls},$ where visitors can take in the picturesque falls while fishing or swimming in the creek. A 28-mile drive from Eugene and a 4-mile hike are all that's needed to experience this.

And if you don't mind a bit longer drive, Oakridge has no shortage of places to cool off. Diamond Creek Falls, Salmon Creek Falls and Salt Creek Falls are there waiting to be explored, each with minimal hikes to the falls and accompanying swimming holes.

But wait, there's more. Brice Creek Falls, Trestle Creek Falls and Wildwood Falls are located near Cottage Grove, with no more than an hour's drive needed to take in the scenery at these beautiful sites and plunge into deep pools. In addition, McDowell Creek Falls outside of Lebanon comes highly recommended as a place to take the kids in summertime and, as part of a leisurely 4.5mile hike with 650-foot elevation gain, to view Royal Terrace Falls and Majestic Falls, and swim in Crystal Pool.

To properly enjoy these falls and the accompanying swimming holes and water slides, it is important to be exactly sure as to the depth of the water before jumping as well as its ferocity. Check for hidden rocks and logs before you leap. For safety purposes, it is also imperative that you do not go alone and do not take lightly rocks that some use as launching pads into pools.

On top of these natural settings, there are water extravaganzas even closer to home. Amazon Pool is kid-friendly and open in the summer, while Skinner Butte Park and River Playground, situated along the Willamette River, gives children the opportunity to climb a replica of the butte and, after that exertion, cool off and bask under a rain circle, a water play feature located in nearby Kalapuya Village.

It doesn't have to be summer to enjoy many water features in and around Eugene if you don't mind being inside. Willamalane Park Swim Center and Splash! are open year-round, and while the water slides and waterfalls in these swim centers aren't picturesque spectacles of nature, they do suffice for avid swimmers and families looking for a good time when the weather isn't so hot.

But at this time in the year, it is about to get really warm out there, which means it's time to grab bathing suits, get in the car and trek to the waterslides, waterfalls and adjoining pools spread throughout the area, with water ready to be waded in and an array of scenery to be enjoyed. – Nick Poust

These FREE community events open up the streets of Downtown Eugene and Bethel neighborhoods to walking, biking, and rolling in a car-free environment, connecting activity centers with live music and much more in city parks along the routes.

Shrewsbury Renaissance Faire, An "educational interactive adventure in history," this ren fair invites you to get blythe & merry "just 15 miles & 500 years away" from Corvallis. From Merry Merchants to Fyne Feating to Friar Tuck's Forest, Shrewsbury has oodles to offer: reenactments, grub, bonnets & bloomers, & ever so much more. The Villager Guidebooke, which is ostensibly meant for those applying to vend or otherwise work the faire, is a surprisingly entertaining read, but if you start asking "How stands the hour?"

SUMMER MOVIE BONANZA

lthough the weather can't seem to make up its mind quite yet about whether it's summer in Eugene, one thing is certain: The raincoat-free sunfilled weeks are just about here. And with long summer days come equally rewarding mild evenings. So what better way is there to enjoy those mild nights than to hang up a white sheet, pick up a projector and pop open a bottle of wine with friends and enjoy a movie in the comfort of your yard?

If you're feeling less ambitious (or lack a yard), you can simplify the process; open up some windows – let that cool breeze flow – and grab some dark chocolate. Whatever your viewing preference, you can't skimp on the most important part: the movie. Here are eight classic flicks that will forever remain synonymous with the summer season.

BACK TO THE FUTURE

Summer is always the perfect season to dust off the DeLorean and rekindle that Back To The Future flame. By my estimates, if we were to take a ride on Dr. Brown's DeLorean, then we'd be heading back to 1983 where we could probably catch the production of this very film (yes, it's been nearly 30

Spielberg's 1975 summer thriller is always wildly entertaining, especially when you look back on how primitive the special effects were. But that's all part of the modern viewing experience, Jaws is a summer classic and will be a summer movie must for years to come. Plus, who can resist a good shark attack?

WET HOT AMERICAN SUMMER

Remember when life was simple, when all you had to worry about was chasing the idea of love around a summer camp, making out in a chicken coop or writing in your "gournal"? There's nothing like living vicariously through the characters of Wet Hot American Summer on a warm summer night – except now we're older and stuff.

DAZED AND CONFUSED

No one wants to think of high school as the glory days, but Dazed and Confused makes it feel like it wasn't too bad of a time. There was nothing more enjoyable than celebrating the last day of school before summer and this film takes us back to those moments — only with more marijuana humor.

GREASE

John Travolta stole the hearts of women (and men) around America with his electrifying performance in Grease. And when the male cast broke out in "Greased Lightning," the track instantly defined an era. Travolta and company turned a romantic musical into an American cult classic.

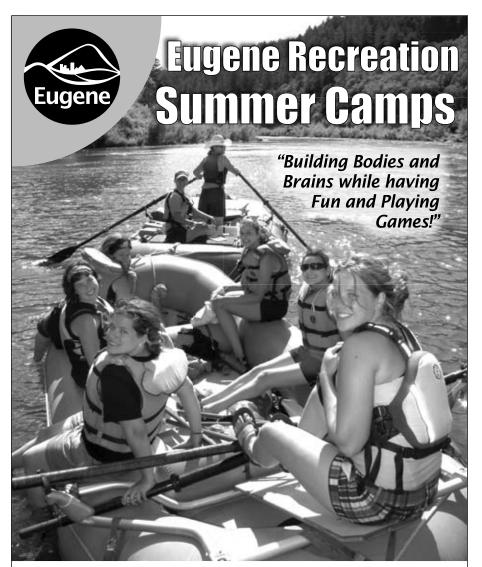

JURASSIC PARK

Mad science, dinosaurs and violence, I'm not sure there's an action movie that fits the summer movie bill quite like Jurassic Park. So if you're not feeling a musical or Michael J. Fox, Jurassic Park might just do the trick.

STAR WARS

George Lucas basically dominated the summer movie culture. The Star Wars franchise is essentially designed for a summer evening movie binge.

This is another film that takes us back to the good ol' days of playing backyard ball with the neighborhood kids. It's definitely an American cliché but one that will never be forgotten. Sandlot is light and refreshing, just like your favorite pale ale. – Kevin Piaskowski

Sniffing out what you shouldn't miss in the arts this week

Summer's first First Friday ArtWalk is June 7. Not to be missed: The 5th Annual Evening of Illuminating Design: The University of Oregon Department of Architecture Luminaire Design Competition and Exhibit at Modern (207 E. 5th Ave.), featuring the award-winning chairs designed by U0 students, which were highlighted at New York City's International Contemporary Furniture Fair in May. And who said waffles and art don't mix? (OK, nobody did.) Off the Waffle's walls will be graced with the work of nine New Zone Gallery artists for the Eclectic Art Exhibit.

Eugene Contemporary Art celebrates its third artist-in-residency Damon Harris with the opening reception of The Initial Conditions 7 pm, June 7, at The Wave in the Whit. Harris draws inspiration from scientific wonders like the Voyager Spacecraft, CERN Large Hadron Collider and Lunar Lander in his light sculptures.

The Majestic Theatre in Corvallis has a big weekend planned. First there's the 22nd Annual Spring Celebration of Dance, featuring modern technique by Ivy Farrell and Amy McDonnell 7:30 pm June 7 and 8. Then see what the 100-year-old theater has been hiding in its basement; The Majestic garage sale runs from 9 am to 2 pm Saturday, June 8, peddling clothes, electronics, accessories and craft supplies.

It's just a flesh wound. Dust off your Black Knight armor because Cottage Theatre is hosting auditions for Monty Python's Spamalot 6:30 pm June 23 and 24. Come prepared to dance, tell a bad joke, "do a silly walk" and "play the coconuts." In other audition news, Actors Cabaret of Eugene hosts auditions for Shrek The Musical 6:30 pm June 7, and the Very Little Theatre invites locals to try out for Laughter on the 23rd Floor 6 pm June 11 and 12.

The Black Panthers marched there, Bill Clinton spoke there, the Red Hot Chili Peppers performed there and part of Animal House was filmed there; the U0 Erb Memorial Union has a long, star-studded and sometimes controversial history. That history has been captured by U0 grad Jonna Threlkeld in the documentary Meet Me at the S.U.: A History of the Erb Memorial Union, which premieres in the EMU Ballroom 6 pm Thursday, June 6 (free). Get to the Fishbowl at 5 pm for five-cent ice cream cones and ten-cent root beer floats.

TWENTYSOMETHING

Noah Baumbach's Frances Ha is a delightful look at the quarter-life crisis

FRANCES HA: Directed by Noah Baumbach. Written by Baumbach and Greta Gerwig. Cinematography, Sam Levy. Editor, Jennifer Lame. Music coordinator, Sara Matarazzo. Starring Greta Gerwig, Mickey Sumner, Adam Driver and Michael Zegen. IFC Films, 2013. R. 86 minutes. ★ ★ ★ ☆

here are 27-year-olds who have their shit together, but I wasn't one of them. If you were, you may watch Noah Baumbach's $Frances\ Ha$ as a sort of anthropological study: the still-questing twentysomething, running into pitfalls and learning (the hard way, of course) that expectation goes hand-in-hand with entitlement, and neither are in sync with reality very often.

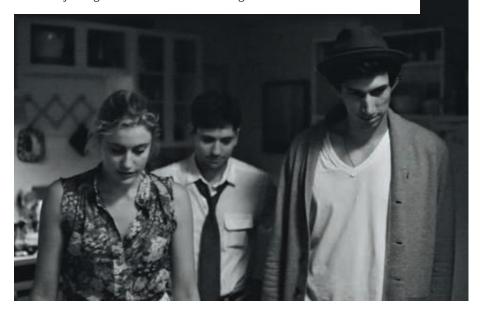

If you were — or are, or expect to be — a person who has not got life totally figured out before 30, you may relate a little more closely to Frances, which awkwardly and lovingly depicts a certain transitional period. It's a tough one to nail, the shift from not-quite-adult to actually-an-adult, but Baumbach and his star and co-writer, Greta Gerwig, wrap this sea change in humor and awkwardness, centering it in hope and friendship, in acceptance of failure and necessary mistakes.

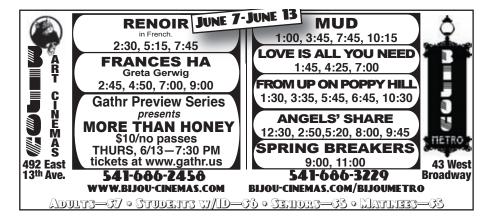

Gerwig, once the darling of a certain corner of the indie set (Hannah Takes the Stairs, Baghead), has long had a peculiar sort of self-consciousness onscreen, a presence that made her both compelling and painful to watch as, for example, the younger woman to Ben Stiller's neurotic Roger in Greenberg.

In Frances, she's a little older, a little more tired, but still playful and genuine. Sam Levy's lush, old-fashioned black-and-white cinematography (nodding to Manhattan and the French New Wave), makes Gerwig look even more like a classic movie star than usual, creating a lovely and apt juxtaposition between the beauty of the film and the mess of Frances' life. Frances (whose last name, thankfully, isn't actually Ha) is an apprentice dancer and an experienced apartment surfer; the film tracks her journey in addresses, from Brooklyn to Sacramento to Poughkeepsie and back to New York. She jokes that she and her best friend, Sofie (Mickey Sumner), are the same person with different hair, but Sofie is rapidly becoming a very different person — one with an office job, a serious boyfriend who buys pre-distressed baseball hats, and less desire to play-fight in the park.

Everything that happens in Frances Ha is tiny and irrelevant, huge and catastrophic. If you're too close to the age and situation of the characters (who are all white and well-educated), you might cringe; if you're too far from their experience, you may roll your eyes. Frances Ha isn't Girls or Tiny Furniture, but there's a firm line connecting them — or maybe several. While Baumbach and Gerwig trace Frances' uneven path to becoming a "real person," they, like Lena Dunham, take the experience of their young, female characters entirely seriously. Frances is quirky, prone to the occasional bout of oversharing, unsure how much to trust herself — but the movie isn't. The big, romantic score, dotted with perfect pop songs (oh, that all movies could use David Bowie this well), pushes the boundaries of this intimate story, making it bigger, making a brief few months in one girl's ordinary life into the pivot on which her personal narrative turns.

Baumbach has said his movies are "about squaring who you want to be with who you actually are." Years ago, he made the best movie about (mostly male) post-collegiate flailing, Kicking and Screaming. Now he's made a better one about growing up. Frances Ha is a funny, sympathetic, perfect take on the golden age for not feeling golden about your life — except at those moments when it's just right because it's a little wrong.

NO-BULL BINGHAM

Name a music biz award and young pro-bull-rider-turned-dusty-throatedtroubadour Ryan Bingham has probably won it. His song "The Weary Kind," from the 2009 Jeff Bridges movie Crazy Heart, was awarded everything from an Oscar to a Grammy. And did I mention he used to be a pro bull-rider? That's some serious country-western cred — I'd like to see Toby Keith or Kenny Chesney try and ride one

And Bingham's got the burnished-leather, whiskey-and-spurs sound to back it up. Bingham's first few records, released on the Americana record label Lost Highway, quickly garnered the Texan songwriter heir-apparent-to-Steve-Earle status, having more in common with Ryan Adams than Garth Brooks. His latest release, 2012's Tomorrowland, out on his own label Axster Bingham Records, continues in much the same vein, if perhaps pursuing Bingham's dreams of arena-sized rock 'n' roll stardom a teensy bit harder.

Tomorrowland opens with "Beg for Broken Legs." Bingham defiantly barks "I ain't gonna bite my tongue" over an Aerosmith-esque guitar riff that resolves into an orchestral denouement recalling the Paul McCartney and Wings' classic "Live and Let Die." Bingham does a spooky-good Springsteen impersonation on "Flower Bomb" and "Rising Of The Ghetto," while raiding Jack White's sludgy and rusty guitar sound for "Guess Who's Knocking," in which the singer threatens: "Guess who is knockin' on the door; It's me, motherfucker, I'm knockin' Ryan Bingham plays with Wild Feathers 7:30 pm Saturday, June 8, at WOW Hall; $20 adv., $22.50 door. — William Kennedy

HILLBILLY SENSIBILITY

Crow Quill Night Owls are an old-timey band dealing with some 21st-century problems. The musicians, based in Port Townsend, Washington, are all set to launch a Kickstarter campaign for a new tour vehicle and to upload their latest record to Bandcamp — only problem is they can't get their computers to work.

"I'm looking for the hand crank," jokes vocalist-guitarist Kit "Stymee" Stovepipe.

Joking aside, the band is gearing up for some pretty big changes, including a move to Asheville, North Carolina — bringing their classic hillbilly tunes to new audiences, an area steeped in that sound. "People there really love old blues and dance music," says vocalist-banjo player "Windy City" Alex.

Stymee explains that simple geography can make touring in the Northwest a challenge. "You've got to get some good paying gigs to get from Eugene to Sacramento," says washtub bassist "Baylin Adaheer." Stymee adds that in Asheville, driving the distance from Port Townsend to Eugene, you'll get to New Orleans.

The group finds inspiration in collecting old 78 rpm records. "We're big collectors of old music. We do originals in a kaleidoscopic amalgamation of what we really like," Stymee says, adding that the Crow Quills also play "traditional songs — not the ones everyone knows, the ones that slip through the cracks."

Windy City explains that the Crow Quill Night Owls harken back to a time when many bands played the same song in dance halls and saloons all over the country. "It wasn't considered a cover," she says. "Our creativity is in the arrangement of the songs."

HIP AT HEART

On Nov. 3 1961, Dave Brubeck played at the U0's McArthur Court for $2.50. Less than a year later, Brubeck joined Tony Bennett for the White House Seminar American Jazz Concert with the Washington Monument as a backdrop. On May 28, 2013, Tony Bennett & Dave Brubeck: The White House Sessions, Live 1962 was released after over a half century forgotten in a vault.

"Anyone who plays jazz adores Dave Brubeck," Bennett told CBS This Morning in May. And anyone who loves jazz, pop music and standards, not to mention an Italian-American purr, old Hollywood glamour and a classy gentleman sheen, adores Tony Bennett. At 86, after singing for more than seven decades, Bennett is a national treasure. His best bud Frank Sinatra did say, "For my money, Tony Bennett is the best singer in the business." Who is going to argue with Ol' Blue Eyes?

Perhaps what has made Bennett one of the best longer than most is not just his velvety croon or perfect pitch, but his knack for attracting fresh, new talent. On Duets II (2011) alone, he harmonized with a whole slew of hip, young cats: Queen Latifah, Sheryl Crow, John Mayer, Norah Jones, Lady Gaga and Amy Winehouse. Bennett and Winehouse won a Grammy for "Body and Soul" in 2012 after Winehouse had passed from alcohol poisoning; the track was her last recording. Between shows this summer, such as the Cuthbert performance June 12, he will record an entire jazz album with Lady Gaga.

Later in the CBS interview, Bennett was asked if he had plans to retire. "Not at all," Bennett said, adding later, "I'm 86 and never been hotter." It seems the music world

Nima's Wish Foundation hosts its annual fundraiser concert SPRING FORWARD June 8-9 at Cozmic; $18-$30 (free for kids 10 and under). The two-day event hosts a smorgasbord of local musicians including headliners Reeble Jar and Sol Seed, Laura Kemp, Phoebe Blume, I-Chele and Zambuco Marimba. Funds go to providing aid for people in Gambia, where Nima Gibba's father is from. The 11-year-old Gibba tragically passed in a car accident in 2009.

Phase two is complete. The Kaleidoscope Music Festival, the inaugural camping fusion fest at Mount Pisgah Aug. 23-25, has beamed in the electronic, fantasypop duo Empire of the Sun from a planet better than ours as another headliner. Other artists include Aesop Rock. Daedelus, Hieroglyphics, Felix Cartal, GRiZ, Cosmic Gate and Candy Cigarettes.

 $\mathcal{E}\mathit{W}\mbox{'s}$ Next Big Thing song of the week: "Beautiful Nothing" by Robert Meade. Meade is a pro and it shines through on this track. With a voice that sounds like the love child of Elliot Smith and Paul McCartney, it's no wonder the troubadour is booking gigs at South by Southwest and the Sundance Film Festival. Catch Meade 6 to 9 pm first and third Fridays at Granary Pizza Co. To enter the contest or vote on your favorite local musicians, visit nextbigthingeugene.com.

SUMMER SOUNDS

f you're wondering why the restaurants and streets along Broadway seem a little more crowded this month, blame The Shedd. The erstwhile Baptist church is hopping with jazz, choral music and its annual summer musical. First up is Friday night's concert featuring the impeccable guitarist Frank Vignola, a frequent and always welcomevisitor who brings a duet partner, guitarist Vinny Raniolo. Proclaimed one of the finest ever by no less than the sainted Les Paul (his former touring partner), the versatile virtuoso can convincingly cover everything from Black Sabbath to Bach, and has played with artists as varied as Steely Dan's Donald Fagen, bluegrass fiddle legend Mark O'Connor and mandolin master David Grisman, jazz masters from Lionel Hampton to Wynton Marsalis. Still under 50, Vignola, who first made his mark with thrilling Django-esque jazz, has also written 18 guitar instruction books, recorded dozens of albums and given master classes at the highest level. In short, if you love guitar, you'll be at this show.

After the smoke clears, The Shedd opens its theatricals season with the fizzy Jazz Age comedy No, No, Nanette!, June 12-16. The team of Robert Ashens and Richard Jessup return to run a full production of the 1925 romp, which stars Evynne Hollens and RonDaum and other Shedd regulars. Vincent Youmans and Otto Harburg's score bubbles with still-snappy song-and-dance numbers like "Tea for Two" and "I Want to be Happy." The setup — a Bible salesman with a saucy daughter visits sinful Atlantic City, where humorous misunderstandings ensue — provides fodder for frothy, flapper frippery.

It's not just former churches that bring fine music to town. Along with hosting its usual religious services, Central Lutheran Church at 18th and Potter has long been a vital venue for chamber music, and Thursday, June 13, it hosts a free concert (if you bring a canned food donation) featuring one of the several vibrant Oregon early music groups that have emerged recently, Ensemble Primo Seicento, featuring Margret Gries, Doug Sears, Bodie Pfost and Kate Rogers playing ancient instruments (or replicas) such as the cornetto, sackbut and period versions of violin and organ. These historically informed experts will play lively music of the early 17th century (a nice warm up for the Oregon Bach Festival, whose namesake was influenced by some of these sounds) by Italian composers such as Dario Castello, opera pioneer Francesco Cavalli and more.

Churches often make wonderful venues for chamber music because the relatively small ensembles originally performed in places of similar size — or even smaller — than today's massive concert halls. But some of the greatest chamber music is composed for even cozier settings. On June 15, you can hear two of classical music's greatest chamber masterpieces in a house concert that benefits the Oregon Mozart Players, several of whose members will perform one of Mozart's most beautiful works, his String Quintet K. 515, a movement from Franz Schubert's great "Death and the Maiden" string quartet and his "Arpeggione" sonata. Unlike Ensemble Primo Seicento, the musicians will play a viola wielded by Clark Spencer. It's especially appropriate to hear Schubert's music in such a setting because much of it was originally played during his lifetime in house concerts called "Schubertiades."

The downside of house concerts is that there isn't that much room available, even in this expansive venue with a view of the Willamette's Coast Fork, so you'll need to grab 'em quick (345-6648). If you miss out, though, there'll be other opportunities, because this is the first in a series of these small-scale shows. Along with the mostly jazz-oriented Broadway House concerts we told you about last month, this new series represents a welcome new — or rather old — way of hearing great music that's often much more memorable than another concert hall show.

UNDERSTANDING AN ENIGMA

The University Theatre explores mathematics and sexuality in Breaking the Code ieces of a life burst across the stage; the years slip by, 1952, 1939, 1949. The audience picks up the threads of the story, each scene inspiring the viewer to piece the events together, to crack the code to understanding the life of Alan Turing.

Hugh Whitemore's play, based on the book Alan Turing: The Enigma by Andrew Hodges, is a loving homage to a great thinker. Turing, working in England in the first half of the 20th century, was a homosexual who no more accepted that his sexuality was wrong than any of his more notable eccentricities. He is not a fighter, simply a man who wants to go about his business of applying mathematics for the greater good of society while loving men without being hassled. Tried, convicted and sentenced to time and estrogen therapy, Turing is turned from war hero to social pariah.

The other story of Alan Turing, the genius who broke the Nazi Enigma code and pioneered early computers, was given less drama but plenty of explanation in Whitemore's play. Whitemore is telling two enormous stories at once, and if the professional life of Turing wasn't given its fair share, at 2 hours and 45 minutes, it wouldn't have been wise for him to put much more in.

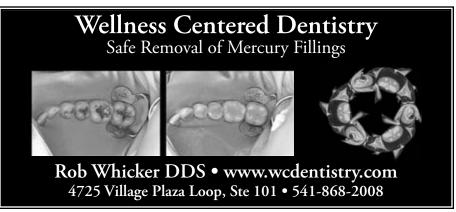

Joseph Gilg directs, surrounding his focused cast with a masterful set. His work with actor Jason Rowe as Turing is impressive. Rowe captures the nervous tics, slight stutter, self-sufficiency and hope of an incredible thinker.

Rowe's work as Turing, and indeed the role itself, are superior to much that has been done in Eugene. The cost of such a remarkable performance is that the other actors, whose roles were not nearly as well written, are somewhat overshadowed by his performance. Whitemore simply didn't supply them with characters that rival Turing. Yet the minor characters manage to be often funny and wholeheartedly invested, giving us a glimpse of what Whitemore could have written.

As is so often the case, I am grateful to the UO for choosing a complicated, relevant piece. While I don't love every choice the playwright made, this story educates and inspires. In the current social debate about gay marriage, Breaking the Code offers a clear warning of criminalizing human sexuality. Ultimately, Code leaves us with a deep sadness, reflecting on the life of a man whose thoughts and actions were decades ahead of his time.

Breaking the Code runs through June 9 at the University of Oregon's Hope Theatre; $12-$14. Tickets available at tickets.uoregon.edu

Dorothy Shannon and I would like to reintroduce myself to our community. I am a Certified Nurse Midwife, now practicing solely in general Women's Health Care. I have lived and worked in Eugene for the last twenty-four years. I delivered many babies when I first arrived and since 1999, I have been working with women of all ages, for their gynecological needs, preventative exams, contraception, problems, and menopausal concerns.

Last July, 2012, I opened my own solo practice called "Women's Health and Wellness". I have always thought that women need more time during their exam to get to know them. and for them to express their concerns. A little listening goes a long way! In our current health care system, I feel there is no time allotted for practitioners to focus on anuthing beyond the "problem" that the patient is being seen for. I feel veru fortunate to be able to offer women the extra time theu need and focus on their general well being.

In my new office, I can provide a relaxed, supportive and private environment, which is very important to me. I strongly believe in providing personalized health care for each individual because every woman is unique and has their own story. In my exam room, it is about much more than just having a Pap smear!

I believe in education and strive to offer my knowledge at each visit. I love my job!

Our new office is small and inviting. It is located at 1755 Coburg Road, Bldg. 1, Suite 2 in Eugene. Our phone number is (541) 984-3000.

Interested in writing about your business? It is now included as part of a discounted Classifieds ad package. Call 541-484-0519 for more info.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The longest natural arch in the world is the Fairy Bridge in Guangxi Province, China. Made of limestone, this 400-foot-wide span crosses over the Buliu River. No one outside of China knew about it until 2009, when an American explorer spied it on Google Earth. Let's make the Fairy Bridge your metaphor of the month, Aries. Judging by the astrological omens, I suspect there's a good chance you will soon find something like a natural, previously hidden bridge. In other words, be alert for a link between things you didn't know were TAURUS (April 20-May 20): I hope that in recent weeks you've made yourself a master of sticky and intricate details. I trust you've been working harder and smarter than you have in a long time. Have you, Taurus? Have you been grunting and sweating a lot, exerting yourself in behalf of good causes? Please tell me you have. And please say you're willing to continue for a while longer. The way I see it, your demanding tasks aren't quite finished. In fact, the full reward for your efforts may not become available unless you keep pushing beyond the point that you consider to be your fair share.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): How free do you want to be, Gemini? A tiny bit free, hemmed in by comfortable complications that require you to rely on white lies? Or would you rather be moderately free in ways that aren't too demanding — politely, sensibly free? Maybe you feel brave and strong enough to flirt with a breathtaking version of liberation — a pure, naked freedom that brings you close to the edge of wild abandon and asks you to exercise more responsibility than you're used to. I'm not telling you which kind you should opt for, but I am suggesting that it's best if you do make a conscious choice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): In August 1961, the communist government of East Germany built the Berlin Wall. It was a thick concrete barrier designed to prevent the oppressed citizens of East Berlin from escaping to freedom in West Berlin. The barrier was eventually policed by armed guards. Traffic between the two Berlins became virtually impossible for the next 28 years. Then a miracle occurred: East German authorities relinquished their stranglehold. They tentatively allowed East Berliners to travel to West Berlin. Soon the Mauerspechte, or "wall woodpeckers," showed up. Armed with hammers and chisels, these people began chipping away at the Wall. Two years later, most of it had been demolished. I hereby assign you to be a wall woodpecker in your own sphere, Cancer. The time is right to demolish a barricade. It may take a while, but you're ready to start.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The following slogan captures the spirit I bring to composing my horoscopes: "I live in the future so that you don't have to." But right now this slogan doesn't apply to you. From what I can tell, you are currently visiting the future as much as I do. Here's what I wonder, though: Are you time-traveling simply to run away from the dilemmas that face you in the present? Or are you taking advantage of your jaunts to acquire revelations that will help you solve those dilemmas once you return?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You know that there are different kinds of stress, right? Some varieties wear you out and demoralize you, while other kinds of stress excite and motivate you. Some lead you away from your longterm goals, and others propel you closer. The coming weeks would be an excellent time for you to fine-tune your ability to distinguish between them. I suspect that the more you cultivate and seek out the good kind, the less susceptible you'll be to the bad kind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Studies show that people spend 87 percent of their time inside buildings and 6 $percent\ in\ enclosed\ vehicles.\ In\ other\ words,\ they\ are\ roaming\ around\ outside\ enjoying\ the\ wind\ and\ sky\ and$ weather for only 7 percent of their lives. I think you're going to have to do better than that in the coming week, Libra. To ensure your mental hygiene stays robust, you should try to expose yourself to the natural elements at least nine percent of the time. If you manage to hike that rate up to 10 percent or higher, you stand a good chance of achieving a spiritual epiphany that will fuel you for months.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Resurrection is the Scorpionic specialty. Better than any other sign of the zodiac, you can summon the power to be reborn. It is your birthright to reanimate dreams and feelings and experiences that have expired, and make them live again in new forms. Your sacred totem is the mythical phoenix, which burns itself in a fire of its own creation and then regenerates itself from the ashes. Now here's the big news headline, Scorpio: I have rarely seen you in possession of more skill to perform these rites than you have right now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Octavio Paz spoke to a lover in his poem "Counterparts": "In my body you search the mountain for the sun buried in its forest. In your body I search for the boat adrift in the middle of the night." What have you searched for in the bodies of your lovers, Sagittarius? What mysteries and riddles have you explored while immersed in their depths? How has making love helped you to better understand the meaning of life? I invite you to ruminate on these uncanny joys. Remember the breakthroughs that have come your way thanks to sex. Exult in the spiritual education you have received through your dealings with lust and sensuality. And then go out and stir up some fresh epiphanies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do you know what minced oaths are? They're rarely used anymore. If you went back a hundred years, though, you'd hear them regularly. They were sanitized swear words, basically; peculiar exclamations that would allow people the emotional release of profanities without causing a ruckus among those who were listening. "Bejabbers!" was one. So were "thunderation! and "dad-blast!" and "consarn!" Here's one of my favorite minced oaths: "By St. Boogar and the saints at the backside door of purgatory!" I bring this up, Capricorn, because I suspect it'll be a minced oath kind of week for you. What I mean is: You'll have every right to get riled up, and you should express your feelings, but not in ways that create problems for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): There's only one correct way to spell the English word "beauty." But that wasn't true centuries ago. Before the advent of the printing press, orthographic anarchy prevailed for many words. Some of beauty's variations included bewte, beaute, beaultye, beuaute, bealte, buute, bewtee, and beaultye. I bring this up, Aquarius, because I think it would be fun and healthy for you to take a respite from having to slavishly obey standardized rules. I'm talking about not just those that apply to spelling, but others, too. See what you can get away with.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In the last chapter of Fyodor Dostoevsky's novel The Brothers Karamazov, the lead character says the following: "There is nothing nobler, stronger, healthier, and more helpful in life than a good remembrance, particularly a remembrance from childhood. A beautiful, holy memory preserved from childhood can be the single most important thing in our development." I bring this up, Pisces, so as to get you in the right frame of mind for this week's featured activity: remembrance. One of the greatest gifts you can give yourself is to reminisce about the old days and the old ways. To do so will enhance your physical health and purify your emotional hygiene.

HOMEWORK: I dare you to do something that you will remember with pride and passion until the end of your days. Testify at Freewillastrology.com.

verybody deserves a good home

541-689-1503 www.green-hill.org 88530 Greenhill Rd

Claudette has been at Greenhill for almost a year now. Probably because she's not keen on strangers and that's just what potential adopters are to her. Every day she takes up position to watch the birds at their feeders outside the cattery window. Then, all day long she's confronted by people wanting to meet her. She reacts in a less than elcoming manner and they quickly move along. If she only knew that they want to love and care for her and to finally give her the home that she's been waiting so very long for. Don't let Claudettes misunderstanding of your intentions deter you from giving her the life that she needs and deserves. Once you are no longer a stranger, she will reward your efforts with endless devotion. The love that you offer will be returned with whiskers attached.

WORDS OF WISDOM BY DAN SAVAGE

I love my husband of 20 years, but our sexual differences are putting a strain on our marriage. Ten years ago, he asked me to talk dirty to him about having sex with other men. It has progressed to him wanting to be a cuckold. I only want to be with him, but he presses the issue by verbalizing cuckold situations during sex. This makes me close my eyes and shut down. By the time he is done, I have no desire to orgasm because I no longer feel attractive. Worse, I feel like I am not enough for $him. \ The \ only \ way \ he \ can \ get \ off \ is \ to \ talk \ about, think \ about, or \ hear \ me \ talk \ about \ having \ sex \ with$ $other\ men.\ It\ makes\ me\ feel\ worthless\ as\ a\ sex\ partner\ --\ which\ is\ crazy,\ because\ l\ am\ attractive$ and open to a great deal of things (toys, games, dressing up, striptease, etc.). I long for him to touch me, kiss me, and look at me the way he used to. He is a good father and a good provider, and $I \ love \ him. \ But \ this \ matter \ is \ crushing \ my \ self-esteem. \ I \ won't \ stay \ much \ longer \ if \ this \ continues.$ Extremely Frustrated Female Experiencing Despair

Your husband was probably reading cuckolding blogs for years before he worked up the nerve to raise the subject, EFFED, and here's what he's gleaned: husband brings it up, wife shoots it down, husband whines, wife agrees to explore it as fantasy only, and then one day — after months or years of $\label{eq:continuous} \mbox{dirty talk} - \mbox{wife announces she wants to give it a try. She winds up loving it, she says she regrets}$ $waiting \ so \ long, \ and \ husband \ lives \ happily \ ever \ after \ in \ cuckolded \ bliss. \ Reading \ so \ many \ cuckolding$ success stories — many likely fictitious — has left your husband convinced that if he just keeps at it, one day his wife will want to try it. (Some wives do try it and like it. I got a letter from a woman who's angry that her husband — after years of dirty talk and a half-dozen cuckolding experiences — has decided that it isn't for him after all. He doesn't want her sleeping with other men; she doesn't want to go back to sleeping with just him. Dr. Cuckenstein created a monster.)

Tell your husband in no uncertain terms that you don't want to hear about cuckolding anymore. Period. He is free to think about whatever he wants to during sex — we all are — but he has to keep his cuckolding fantasies to himself. Wrap up the convo by informing him that from now on, your sex sessions end the moment the subject of you sleeping with other men is raised. No more closing your eyes and waiting for him to finish. (And what kind of asshole can finish under those circumstances?) If he brings up other men, EFFED, get off the bed, get out of the bedroom, and go to the kitchen and have some ice cream. Your husband needs to find a new erotic script that works for you both. The incentive for him: Since you are open to many things — toys, games, dressing up, striptease — a fantasy scenario that turns you on is likely to become a reality scenario pretty quickly.

Finally, EFFED, cuckolds don't see their wives as unattractive. Cuckolds see their wives as so desirable — and so insatiable — that they're incapable of giving their wives all of the sexual attention they deserve. But I can see why you're upset. You want sex to be about the two of you, about the intimacy you share (or used to share), and your inconsiderate husband is always running his mouth about people who aren't in the room. It's understandable that you would feel like you're not enough for him after 10 years of this bullshit. But your husband's cuckolding fantasies don't mean he finds you unattractive — they mean the exact opposite.

 $I\,am\,a\,28-year-old\,married\,straight\,male.\,I\,have\,a\,lot\,of\,confusion\,regarding\,my\,sexual\,orientation$ and gender identity, and I am in therapy. My question for you is about my current self-pleasuring routine. I get high and watch "sissy self-hypnosis" videos. These videos consist of text, pictures, and subliminal suggestions aimed at hypnotizing straight males into some kind of "mind control" sex slavery. Some are about cuckolding and femdom; some are about being brainwashed into sucking cock. It is all done in a really amateurish and (hopefully) ineffective way. Am I destroying my brain here?

Man Wondering About Hypnosis

I haven't encountered any glassy-eyed straight guys wandering around my gay neighborhood offering to suck cock, so I'm thinking these videos are ineffective. They sound like a harmless way for an otherwise healthy, stable straight guy to fantasize about ceding his power and privilege to people ${\sf posterior}$ the culture taught him to regard as weak and inferior, i.e., women and fags. That said, MWAH, it doesn't sound like you're an otherwise healthy, stable straight guy. You're confused about your sexual orientation and gender identity, and you're working on those issues with a shrink. That being the case, MWAH, I think you might wanna avoid these videos for the time being.

I always told myself that I would forgive my husband if he cheated on me. Well, he had an affair for eight months. He also blew through our savings and racked up considerable credit-card debt. The college fund we started for our two children is gone. He spent all of the money on fancy dinners, expensive gifts, and incredible vacations for his girlfriend. I am so angry, I can't imagine staying. My husband ended the affair and wants desperately to save our marriage. As much as it pains me to subject my kids to divorce, I don't know if I can commit to him again. Is the best option to DTMFA?

 $Sexual\ infidelity\ is\ one\ thing\ -- and\ it's\ a\ relatively\ common\ thing\ (so\ people\ should\ go\ into\ marriage)$ prepared to work through it] — but we're not talking about one thing here. We're talking about a whole series of betrayals. Your husband betrayed you sexually and financially. He stole from you. He stole

Now, I can understand thinking with your dick (because I have a dick), and we can all imagine a circumstance in which we might succumb to temptation (because we all experience temptation). But I $\,$ cannot even begin to wrap my head around how someone could spend his own children's college fund in addition to his family's savings (and taking on debt!) — on gifts, trips, and meals for his piece-ofshit on the side. (Not all "other women" are pieces of shit, but anyone who would allow her married lover to spend that kind of money on her in eight months is a flaming piece of shit.)

It's advice, H, not binding arbitration. You are free to make up your own mind. And while I couldn't see staying if I were in your shoes, I could see myself meeting with a marriage counselor a few times before pulling the plug — for the sake of the kids.

This week on the Savage Lovecast, Dan reveals the secret of how to get straight women to dive into casual sex, and Lindy West talks about men who think your vagina is disgusting: savagelovecast.com.
